College students often receive dozens of credit card applications. While opening and using accounts responsibly is a good way to establish a sound credit history, once someone bounces checks, misses payments, or maxes out a card, repairing their credit can be as challenging as bringing up their grade point average.

“What’s My Score” is a free program designed for college students that shares:

- Why it is important to establish a good credit history

- Differences between credit scores and credit reports
- How to order free annual credit reports
- Mistakes that can lower your credit score and how to fix them
- Common credit myths
- Tips for getting out of debt
