Do you want to apply sociological concepts and theories to the understanding of various forms and phenomena of criminal behavior?

Do you want to identify the general categories of crime and social reactions to these crimes?

Do you want to understand the major components of the criminal justice system and how these components interact at both the micro- and macro-levels?

Do you want current, real-world experiences brought into the classroom to augment your academic learning?

If you answered YES to these questions, you will definitely want to enroll in SOCI 411-Criminology with Professor Darrin Lee. Professor Lee is a practicing law enforcement officer in Orange County with two decades of police experience. He brings with him a dynamic teaching style leveraging his experience as a police use of force expert, tactical officer, gang detective, community policing officer, emergency manager, trainer, and patrol supervisor. Students in SOCI 411 will participate in class discussions peppered with real-world examples from the field like illicit drug use, officer involved shootings, juvenile delinquency, and much more!

Registration begins October 31 so don’t hesitate to enroll!
